BRECKENRIDGE GIRL A WHITE SLAVE

Miss Pearl Snyder, Of Harned, Says She Was Sent To Tampa By Edna Shelley, Ticket Seller, Of Casino Show.

LEFT HOME AUGUST 27.

Louisville, Ky., Sept. 18.—Telegraph advices early this morning that the mayor and chief of police of Tampa had demanded the immediate arrest of Edna Shelley, of 328 West Jefferson street, cashier at a motion picture theater, followed hard upon the heels of the news that the girl who alleges that she had been held in white slavery in the Florida town, had been identified as Miss Pearl Snyder, of Harned, Breckenridge county, Ky. The Tampa officials called upon United States District Attorney Cheney, of Orlando, Fla., to take steps to have the Louisville woman taken into custody. The latter is charged by Miss Snyder with having furnished her transportation to Tampa and sent her to a house of ill fame under false pretenses.

The girl, who alleges that she was the victim of white slavers, was released from a resort at Tampa, kept by a woman named Marian Lawrence, four days ago, following an appeal to the police. She was ill when taken from the place and was removed to a hospital, where she gave her name as Mary Richardson and her home as Harned, Ky.

Family Reached Over 'Phone.

The girl's identity was finally established last night. Her sister and J. A. Gray, a friend of the family, were reached by long-distance telephone, and upon being told of the contents of a news dispatch from Tampa, said they had no doubt that the girl at Tampa was Pearl Snyder.

Miss Snyder's sister and Mr. Gray, when informed by telephone as to the circumstances of the case, made the following statement:

"Pearl left home August 27, intending to first visit the Hardinsburg fair and then to go to Louisville in search of employment. She visited the fair and was in the company of neighbors during the day. That was the last seen or heard of her by any of her friends. Her brother and sister, with whom she lived, did not know how much money she had. After she left we heard nothing from her. The inquiries made by Louisville reporters, of which we were told tonight by neighbors, gave us our first intimation that she might be the girl in Tampa. The substance of the dispatches from Tampa leads us to believe that the story is true. The family will take care of her and will ask that the guilty parties be prosecuted."

Refuses Interviewers.

The home of Miss Edna Shelley, who was accused by the Snyder girl of furnishing her transportation and directing her to the resort of the Lawrence woman in Tampa, was closed to newspaper men yesterday. The report given out at the home of Miss Shelley Saturday night that the young woman had left the city was contradicted by several acquaintances of Miss Shelley. They asserted that she is still at home, and though she feels keenly the notoriety the case has given her, has no intention of leaving town.

Thus far there has been no evidence of activity by the local secret service men in the case. District Attorney George DuRelle, declared yesterday afternoon that he had received no official notification of the arrests in Tampa nor of the connection with the case of the Louisville woman.

The penalty in cases of conviction for white-slave dealing is not less than five years in a Federal prison. This applies to all agents in the interstate transportation of girls or women to engage in immoral pursuits.

In speaking over the phone to The Breckenridge News yesterday morning, Oscar Snyder said that he had telegraphed to Pearl Snyder at Tampa, Fla., to see if the woman was his sister. He thinks she is, but as yet, has received no word from her. Mr. Snyder said he had not heard from her since she left for Louisville. Her parents are dead and she lived with him. She has two sisters, Bessie and Ruth, the first being married.

DAVIS' CONDITION NO WORSE

Man Shot By H. L. Stader In Louisville Has Chance To Live—Mr. Stader Returned Home—Cause Of Shooting Not Told

EXAMINING TRIAL TOMORROW

The condition of Dr. John R. Davis, of Vine Grove, who was shot by H. L. Stader in Louisville, shows no change for the worse. The shooting occurred in the yard of Mr. and Mrs. Burt Muir, Wednesday morning about 2:30 a. m. A charge of shooting and wounding was placed against Stader and he was placed under a $1,500 bond furnished by C. W. Moorman of this city. He will appear at his examining trial in the Police Court in Louisville tomorrow.

When seen by a representative of The Breckenridge News Saturday, Mr. Stader said he could not discuss the trouble, the cause of the shooting or anything in regard to it. He had been advised by his lawyer, Henry Sanders, not to say a word about the affair.

Mr. Stader returned home Thursday night from Louisville. He has opened his home but takes his meals at Kingsbury's.

Mrs. Stader is in Louisville at the home of her sister, Mrs. Muir. Her mother, Mrs. Anna Ryan, is with her.

She went to Louisville about two weeks ago and Mr. Stader went last Tuesday evening. Mrs. Ryan was called to Louisville Wednesday morning.

Not So Gay In Newport

Dear Mr. Babbage: Enclose find $1 for The News another year. Will leave Newport in November as usual for Danvers, Mass., and will ask you then to change the address.

This has been a good season in Newport, though the society people do not entertain so lavishly as they did a few years ago.

We will make a great effort to elect a Democratic Governor in Rhode Island this year. We have not made the nominations yet, but Lewis A. Waterman, once a news-boy in Providence, will be the nominee and we have a good chance to elect him, with a chance to elect a legislature with him and if we do, some of the King George Charter Laws will be repealed. I am watching the fight in Kentucky and I am sure you will win with the old "War Horse" McCrery. I remember hearing him speak at Hardinsburg nearly 25 years ago, also Simon B. Buckner and remember hearing the boys cry hurrah for Buckner. Betsy, the baby and I rode a mile from Webster to Hardinsburg that morning with my father, T. B. Henderson. We started bright and early and got there before the crowd arrived, and I met the delegation from the upper end of the county near where the railroad station is now. They were headed by the Brandenburg band and they carried a flag made, I believe by Misses Ada and Beatty Drury of Bewleyville. I love to think of the old days in dear old Kentucky; and I always glad to read the News and find out what you all are doing.—Wathen B. Henderson, Newport, R. I.

The Passing Of Summer

Another summer has passed. The delicate tints of autumn are visible on field and forest. All nature seems so still, as if resting after its two seasons of budding and blooming. At this season the hush of Nature falls heavily on the heart of those who can read her signs aright, and are in sympathy with her varying moods. I the song of every bird there seems a saddened note; in every passing breeze a whispered parting; in every waterfall a wail—in the silence tears. Even the birds seem tired of the long, gay season, and are resting in some sylvan retreat. The sun shines but dimly; the few remaining flowers droop languidly in the weakened rays. The zephyrs sigh in plaintive tones, as if chanting a dirge to fading beauty. The hoarse voice of November will soon drive the birds to warmer climes, and scatter leaves over our summer's dead; then the winter's winding sheet will fall over all.

I've watched the shadows creep along until the close of day, And listened to the whispering zephyrs 'mong the swaying branches play, I've watched the mist upon the plains fast flee, before the moon's sun, And watched the vine climb high up on the arch to kiss the sun.

The shadows speak of fleeting years, And the changes they may bring, The zephyrs whisper to my ear a song I shall forever sing, The mist is vanished dreams which sped before the noon of life, The vine speaks to my aching heart, Look up higher for the brighter light. Mrs. A. Moseley.

Mother of the Lucky Thirteen; has Thirty-three Grand-children; Fifty Great Grand-children.

Three months from to-day, if all is well, ninety candles can be lighted on a cake for Mrs. Nancy Leaf, for the twentieth of December she will have reached the ninetieth anniversary of her birthday.

She is an interesting woman and the oldest one living in the Tobinsport community. She is the mother of fourteen children, thirteen of whom are living. John, the one who is dead, was killed by a bayonet thrust during the latter part of the Civil War.

Mrs. Leaf is the daughter of Henry and Mary Weatherholt. She first saw the light at what was known as "The Old Chimney Place," near the spot where the oil well was drilled on W. S. Leaf's place. When she was seventeen years of age she became the bride of Andrew Leaf, who died nineteen years ago.

During the early life of Mr. and Mrs. Leaf the country in what is now known as the Tobinsport Bottoms was heavily wooded and some days the paths would be as dark as night. Only a few patches were cleared around the houses of the few settlers scattered there and there. Mrs. Leaf says in those days that bugs had never been heard of and people had not even then begun to ride horse back. Everyone walked from one place to another, many even walking

Aged Couple Celebrate Birthday Anniversaries

Raymond, Sept. 18, (Special)—An enjoyable occasion was that of the birthday dinner Friday, September 15, of Mr. and Mrs. Tom Hall, it being their birthday anniversaries. Notwithstanding the weather was unfavorable, between seventy five and eight persons partook of the sumptuous feast, which the relatives and many friends had prepared.

Mrs. Hall has been an invalid about four years, she having had a stroke of paralysis four years ago, leaving her left side helpless.

Mr. Hall has been a sufferer nearly a year. He is in bed most of the time. Friday was the sixty-eighth birthday of Mr. Hall and the sixty-sixth of Mrs. Hall. Mr. and Mrs. Hall have been married forty-five years. To this union ten children were born: Mrs. Levi Pollock, Mrs. Hayden Bassett, Mrs. W. F. Chappell, Mrs. Frank Philpot, Mrs. Sam Johnson, Miss Blanche Hall, June, Floyd, Mack and John Hall, all living except Mack and John, who died after they were grown. They are the grand parents of sixteen living grand children. Mr. Hall was an old soldier in the Civil War. Three other soldiers, Messrs Jos Flaherty, Matt Chappell and John S. Hardesty were there. For amusement, they had a lovely croquet ground and a graphophone with very beautiful records. Below is a list of names of those who ate dinner: Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Chappell and two boys, Mr. and Mrs. Hayden Bassett and two children, Mr. and Mrs. Floyd Hall and five children, Mr. and Mrs. June Hall and daughter, Mrs. Frank Philpot, Mr. and Mrs. Sam Johnson, Mr. and Mrs. Levi Pollock and five children, Miss Blanche Hall, Mr. and Mrs. Levi Kerrick, Messrs Joe Flaherty, John S. Hardesty, Matt Chappell and family, Mr. and Mrs. Roland Smith, of Stephensport, Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Argabright, W. L. Black and two children, Mrs. Mary Ater, Mr. and Mrs. Taylor Compton and daughter, Miriam, Mr. and Mrs. Carrease Knott, Mr. Otis Stiff and family, Austin Knott and Houston Pollock, of Cal., Mr. and Mrs. Doler Hardesty, Dr. Hardesty, Edgar Compton, Almond Chappell, Mr. and Mrs. Ed Hartley and two children and Mrs. Glen Macy and two boys.

MOUNT ETNA IN EVERY FOUR

Last Previous Serious Outbreak Was In January, 1907.

ERUPTION OR FIVE YEARS

Newspaper Correspondent's Description of 1908 Eruption.

THE latest eruption of Mount Etna is considered the most grave in years. It has been estimated that Etna's periods of activity occur at intervals of four or five years, as a rule, and as the last serious eruption was in January, 1907, the volcano may be said to be maintaining its schedule. Although the disturbance of 1907 was pronounced, it was by no means as destructive as the great eruption of 1892. The most destructive previous outbreaks on record occurred in 1169, 1609, 1693, 1792, 1879, 1886 and 1892.

There was a mild outbreak in May, 1908, and for a time the inhabitants along the slopes and in nearby towns were thrown into excitement, but Etna subsided after covering the countryside with smoke and ashes and was not heard from again until March, 1910, when at the height of the tourist season in Sicily the crater opened. It is not the height so much as the tremendous extent of the mountain that has impressed tourists. Its base spreads out almost twenty-five miles, and from there to the summit it is almost a perfect cone. At certain seasons the sides are covered with snow halfway down. The crater is 10,000 feet above sea level, making Etna the loftiest volcano in Europe and the highest peak in Italy south of the Alps.

On Dec. 28, 1908, at the time of the Messina disaster, loud detonations were heard, and volumes of smoke rolled out of the crater. A panic arose among the people of Catania, the nearest town to the volcano, but Professor Ricco, director of the observatory, said that a great eruption was not expected. His views were confirmed by Frank Perret, assistant director of the royal observatory on Mount Vesuvius, who, after an inspection of Mount Etna on April 30, 1909, reported: "The earthquake at Messina has reduced its activity and for the time being has taken the energy necessary to create an eruption. Reports that Mount Etna was in eruption are untrue, as there has been only a slight emission of vapors from the crater."

It was on Jan. 9, 1907, that Mount Etna awoke after a period of inactivity since the eruption of 1899. Smoke, ashes and flame arose from its summit, which was covered with snow. On Jan. 13, 1907, the volcano, at the same time that the earthquake at Kingston, Jamaica, occurred, became more active. Professor Ricco said that the fire openings inside the crater, discovered in 1893, had increased in size, but that only smoke and the reflection of fire could be seen. Ashes were thrown out, and subterranean detonations were heard. On May 8 of the same year the eruption became more violent. The lava flow increased, and the smoke was so abundant that the whole atmosphere as far as Catania was thick with it. There were severe earth shocks, and Professor Ricco was apprehensive of a great eruption.

ROOSEVELT'S HUNT.

Cost Smithsonian, $7,000 — Colonel Himsel Paid $23,000.

In round numbers the cost of the Roosevelt expedition into Africa under the auspices of the Smithsonian Institution was $80,000. The expenses of the actual hunting were divided, the Smithsonian paying about three-fifths and Colonel Roosevelt about two-fifths. The division of expenses ceased when Colonel Roosevelt started on his tour of Egypt and Europe homeward bound.

Secretary Walcott is the only person who knows who were the contributors to the $57,000 spent by the institution in defraying its three-fifths of the expenses of the hunt. He has assured the board of regents that not one penny of money appropriated by the federal government was used and that the money was all collected by him personally from friends of the colonel. He will not make public the list of contributors until the National museum is ready to open to the public the Roosevelt exhibit of African wild animal and bird life. This collection will not be ready for at least a year.

"Bread baking success is guaranteed if you use Lewisport BEST Flour".

It was a year later before the volcano became active again. This time there were earthquakes in continuous shocks, and a new crater opened at a height of 7,000 feet. It ejected columns of steam and clouds of stones and ashes. This crater became the source of two streams of lava, which followed the course taken by the lava in the eruption of 1819 and 1852.

How Etna Spouts Fire.

Describing the appearance of Etna in the eruption of 1908, a correspondent from Taormina wrote:

"Nothing could have looked more peaceful than Etna on the afternoon of my arrival here. The sun went down behind it out of a clear sky, its outlines becoming blacker and more obscure until finally swallowed up in darkness. From outward signs it was the same sleeping beauty that it had been since the last eruption in 1899. In the morning—April 29—there was a change. The peak was enveloped in vapor, which it took only a few seconds to observe was smoke, not cloud, but even then I did not realize that there was anything unusual until I noticed the excitement of the Italians.

"Smoke was coming from the crater at the summit, but by far the larger part from the east side of the mountain, a considerable way down, while now and then would come a rumble, sounding like cannon far away. Later in the forenoon the vapors from the topmost cone ceased, and the smoke swirled out black and menacing from lower down, taking the shape of a funnel and rolling seaward on the wings of a westerly wind.

Novel Sight.

"The sight was as novel to natives as to visitors and perhaps more full of meaning. All day long they kept stealing away from their work and running to the house-tops or other vantage points to watch the changing aspects on the mountain, but they could not tell by day whether the volcano was in eruption.

"Wait until night," they said. "Then if lava is flowing out it will show red through the darkness."

"So interest increased toward dusk, and as the shadows thickened word went around the town: 'L'Etna fuma! L'Etna fuma!' True it was. The giant fountain, after a ten years' truce with the inhabitants of its fertile and expansive slopes, was again belching forth lava from the earth's inwards, though to what extent or with what disaster one could only conjecture.

"From Taormina it appeared as would a huge bonfire on a hill perhaps a mile away, which glowed red and yellow and now and then flared up as if some one had thrown on fresh brush. But when one considered that the burning patch in the darkness was not one but almost twenty miles away he realized that what he saw was a roaring furnace and that what to his eye seemed gentle flickers were, in truth, huge masses of molten lava spouting many feet in the air, the result of tremendous convulsions in the depths below."

NIKOLA TESLA HAS A NEW INVENTION.

Electrical Journal Says He Can Easily Transmit Great Energy.

A new development of a mechanical principle upon which Nikola Tesla is said to have been laboring for some years is described in the Electrical Review. This latest development in mechanics for which so much is claimed by friends of the inventor is based on the adhesion and viscosity of liquids and gases and is said to afford a novel means of generating and transmitting mechanical power.

Dr. Tesla is very optimistic about the results of his long experimentation, but will not discuss the matter for publication. He expressed surprise that any one had heard of his latest work before the appearance of his account of it in the electrical publication.

"The efficiency of the machines Dr. Tesla has constructed on this principle," the Electrical Review says, "is evidenced by their remarkable performance, small turbines or rotary engines being run at a peripheral speed scarcely more than half of that of reaction turbines and giving several times the output of the latter."

The article describes a small steam turbine recently exhibited in New York "having a motor only nine and three-quarter inches in diameter and two inches wide," which is said to be capable of developing 110 horsepower with free exhaust. This machine, it is further stated, has no blades, vanes, valves or sliding contacts of any kind.

"On account of the great simplicity of the apparatus, reversibility and extraordinary output," the article continues, "it will undoubtedly find an immense variety of uses, and the commercial world cannot fail to be deeply interested in this new development. The electrical industry in particular should be greatly benefited by this latest effort of Dr. Tesla."

Farmers, mechanics, railroaders, laborers rely on Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil. Takes the sting out of cuts, burns or bruises at once. Pain cannot stay where it is used.

STABS A MOUNTAIN LION.

Texas Farmer Slew a Beast That Had Killed His Child.

Maddened by the sight of a mountain lion standing over the dead body of his three-year-old son, Juan Morales, a farmer living seven miles from Brownsville, Tex., killed the beast with a knife thrust in the heart after a fifteen minute struggle, in which he sustained injuries which will cost an arm. Morales had gone to a neighbor's on an errand and left his three children, aged three, seven and ten years, at home. His wife died some months ago. He was returning and heard the screams of his children. Rushing into the house, he saw a mountain lion, which weighed over 400 pounds, crouched over the lifeless and almost headless body of his little son.

The beast sprang at Morales, and the desperate fight began. Morales, who is forty-two years old and an athlete, tried for a struggle hold on the animal, which fought with its paws and was fast pulling the flesh from the right arm and shoulder of Morales when he managed to get out his knife and made several cuts at the mountain lion, which only made it more ferocious.

Morales was almost exhausted when he succeeded in driving the big blade of the knife into the heart of the animal and staggered from its grasp as it fell dead at his feet. Morales fainted, and his two little girls revived him with cold water and then helped him to bandage the wounds.

It was a long journey to town for medical aid, and, without a conveyance handy, Morales determined to make the trip on foot with his two surviving children. They had almost completed the journey when a man in a wagon picked them up and carried them to Brownsville.

His First Day at School.

I know a little boy who starts upon a journey far today. And, oh, the love of anxious hearts That follows him along the way!

A traveler to wondrous lands. He turns and smiles and waves again To one with wistful eyes who stands Already lonely at the pane.

She knows the road is rough and long For baby feet so soft and small; She knows how travelers brave and strong Neath stress and storm and burden fall.

But naught of woes her wanderer knows Nor reckons of the strife in store. Blithely, without a care, he goes, Like the gay venturers of yore.

Along that road are love and fame And good for all, yet some there be Who find at last but grief or shame, Whose end is pain and poverty.

Ah, mother of that little boy Who fareth forth alone today, Jed grant your prayer that peace and joy Attend his footsteps all the way!

ROAD BUILDING EXPERIMENTS

Results of Tests Made Near Harrisburg, Pa., of New Methods.

Important changes in the matter of constructing state highways are likely to be made as a result of experiments being conducted by the Pennsylvania state highway department. These were begun two years ago, when it became apparent that under the stress of increasing automobile traffic the ordinary standard macadam roads could not be kept in first class condition without expensive repairs.

The various experiments have been made in the vicinity of Harrisburg, in order to be frequently inspected. The first was a piece of road built on what is called the penetration system in 1908. Upon the usual foundation was placed a layer of crushed stone, half the thickness of that ordinarily used in macadam construction, and into the interstices was poured an asphaltic oil containing about 80 per cent of asphalt. The surface of the road was then covered with dry stone screenings and the mass rolled. Although subjected to heavy traffic for over a year, the road shows but little evidence of wear and is nearly dustless. Two pieces of road closely resembling the ordinary sheet asphalt pavement, which were built last year, show practically no evidence of wear. Telford blocks, laid by hand, were used as a foundation, and on top of this was placed a mixture of crushed stone and asphalt, mixed hot and rolled. A surface of fine stone screenings and asphalt was placed over this.

Another experimental road now being constructed has a telford base, upon which is placed a layer of crushed stone and asphalt mixed with the stone cold and the asphalt hot. The surface is sprinkled with hot asphaltic oil and covered with a thin coating of coarse stone screenings.

These various methods exceed the cost of ordinary macadam by at least 25 per cent, but this extra cost is supposed to be more than compensated by the reduced cost of upkeep.

The department is also experimenting with a dust layer for ordinary macadam roads known as glittrine. It is a byproduct of wood pulp making. The liquid has the consistency and appearance of tar. It is soluble in water, and one of its peculiarities is that each succeeding rainfall renews the bonding or cementing qualities of the compound. A piece of road dressed with it early this season is being carefully watched by the department.

Diarrhoea is always more or less prevalent during September. Be prepared for it. Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy is prompt and effective. It can always be depended upon and is pleasant to take. For sale by all dealers.

THE RACE FOR DREADNOUGHTS

How Experts Appraise Navies of Great Nations.

GREAT BRITAIN IS STILL FIRST.

Two American Warships, Utah and Florida, Are Largest in Service of Leading Powers, While the New York Will Excel Any Being Built.

Since the new American Dreadnought Utah arrived in port at New York to join her sister ship, the Florida, now nearing completion at the Brooklyn navy yard, naval men have been discussing with renewed interest the relative position of American sea fighters as compared with the navies of the other nations. While experts concede that Great Britain has the largest aggregate of warships, with either Germany or the United States second, it is asserted that the two new Dreadnoughts of the United States outrank in size and strength anything afloat.

The British battleships Lion and Orion will excel the two newest American ships, but neither of these is as yet in service. Germany also has a number of powerful Dreadnoughts in course of construction, but the largest German ship in commission is of less tonnage and efficiency than the Utah and Florida, which have displacements of 22,000 tons each as compared with the original Dreadnought of 18,000 tons. They take the lead over the Delaware and North Dakota, 20,000 tons each, which heretofore were the prize ships in the American navy. Besides leading the ships of all the great powers in size, they also bring Germany and the United States nearer together in the race for second place among naval powers.

Among the experts the original Dreadnought has become the accepted unit of sea fighting efficiency. Counting it as a unit of 100, the American battleship Delaware and her sister ship, North Dakota, have an efficiency ratio of 110 each, while the Florida and Utah have a ratio of 125 each. These ratios for American Dreadnought ships aggregate 670 as against an aggregate of about 700 for Germany. So Germany and the United States are separated by only a few points for position of second when the Dreadnought unit of fighting strength is the basis. On ships below the Dreadnought unit the scales are turned in favor of the United States.

The super-Dreadnought New York, whose keel was laid recently, will outrank in tonnage anything thus far built or under way in England and Germany. Her tonnage will be 27,000. The largest British ships under construction are those of the King George class, 25,000 tons, and the largest of the new German ships building are of 23,000 tons. The British designers, however, are planning the Queen Mary, 29,000 tons. The New York represents the largest warships being built, while the Utah and Florida are the largest in the service of any of the great nations.

HUGE BUTTERFLY.

Specimen Found in Brazil Is as Big as a Sparrow Hawk.

W. M. Mann and Frederick Baker, members of the Stanford Brazilian expedition who remained behind, have sent news from Madeira, on the Amazon river, of the discovery of a hitherto unknown species of the morpho, a huge butterfly. The new species is as large as a sparrow hawk and caused considerable fright to the members by flying toward them in an attitude of attack. When within a few feet of its enemy it strikes and soars to a height of twenty or thirty feet, returning to repeat the attack. Several large specimens of the insect have been preserved and will be further investigated upon the party's return to the camp.

The remaining members will travel up the Amazon for a distance of 500 miles and will gather specimens of the animals and plants all along the route. The river, after a hundred miles or so from the mouth, is so thickly infested with crocodiles and large gar that bathing in the river is absolutely impossible with any degree of safety. The crocodiles are of the larger species of the floating variety and are dangerous. Fresh water fish, such as carp and catfish, which in this country do not excel in size, on the Amazon attain the weight of from 300 to 500 pounds under the equatorial sun.

The struggle for existence of vegetation is indescribable, and the bank along the river is one solid mass of tangled vines, palms, mosses and orchids. It is impossible to set foot on the ground for a distance of a mile from the banks. Monkeys, snakes and parrots are the only animals which can exist in the dense clusters.

Family Record on Turtle's Back.

George L. Stillman, a business man of Westerly, R. I., was strolling about his farm, about a mile from the village, when he came across a big turtle which was sunning itself on the banks of a pond. He secured it and found engraved on its shell the initials of his grandfather, Adam Stillman, engraved in 1805. Further examination disclosed the name of another Adam Stillman, his great-grandfather, engraved in 1808, and the name of Paul Maxon, carved in 1798.

BAD ROADS AND FARM DEBERTERS.

The movement of so many thousands of young people from the farm to the city is largely caused by bad roads, which isolate their homes and render the world around them inaccessible. The addition to the urban population lessens the producing force of the farm and at the same time creates a greater demand for farm products. This means a higher cost of living, and an undesirable situation results.

WORK OF THE GOVERNMENT IN PRESERVING ROADS.

Experiments in Dust Preventives and Binders Being Made.

During the past year the work of the office of public roads of the department of agriculture relative to the investigation of the problems of dust prevention and road preservation has advanced rapidly. Routine tests or analyses of bituminous road materials made in the laboratories during the past year were more than double the number made during the preceding year.

A number of these examinations were made in conjunction with the experimental field work of the office. It is expected that these examinations will be of great service in determining the value of certain classes of binders, as the experimental work is carefully inspected from time to time, and the results are made a matter of record.

Through its laboratory work the office has been able to offer valuable advice in regard to specifications for bituminous road binders and in many instances to frame such specifications upon request of various public service bodies. A number of the state highway commissions have profited by this opportunity.

Many worthless road preparations have been and are at present being manufactured and sold to the public through ignorance on the part of both producer and consumer with regard to the requisite characteristics of such materials to meet local conditions. These materials are sold under trade names and as a rule carry no valid guaranty of quality.

Specifications for such materials are therefore much needed for the protection of the public, and this phase of the work will be given continued attention by the office. Special investigations of bituminous road materials carried on by the laboratory have covered improvements in the methods of analysis, the effect of various methods of distillation upon the physical and chemical properties of tars and the development of a test for determining the binding value of bitumens.

OILING ROADS CHEAP.

How Evanston (Ill.) Highways Are Kept Dustless.

A noiseless, asphalt-like road surface, dustless—which asphalt is not—and mudless, new every year and at a cost no greater than for the sprinkling of ordinary roads or pavements, is made possible by the use of what is left of petroleum after kerosene, gas oil and paraffin have been removed—that is, if the road upon which it is used is macadam. Francis Buzzell in the Popular Mechanics Magazine tells how this has been demonstrated on the roads of Evanston, a wealthy suburb of Chicago.

He says that the city buys the road oil at 3 cents a gallon. It is delivered in tank cars of the standard type, which cars are run on to a siding and held until the oil is used up on the streets. The average application is one-quarter gallon to a square yard.

The force required for the work does not exceed eight men. One of this number is a foreman, paid a wage of $3 per day, and the other seven, stationed at the tank car to aid in pumping the oil out when this is necessary, receive $2 per day.

Road Near Topeka.

For many miles out of Topeka, Kan., to the west there is an almost ideal dirt road that has been made and kept in condition by use of the road drag.

When the rain or snow falls this road becomes a little muddy on top, but the mud is never deep, and there are no ruts or "chuck holes." It is so graded that the drainage is perfect and it dries off almost immediately.

This splendid road has taken the place of one that was almost impassable in bad weather and very rough in good. It cost the labor and expense of one dragging per month and was made possible by the activity of one man who interested his neighbors. Now the neighbors would not willingly do without it. Such roads are possible in most neighborhoods in Kansas.

SPLIT LOG DRAG.

A split log drag will make the road impervious to water provided it is used in wet weather and is not too sharp.

Better Roads Shorten Distances.

"I wish my farm was only half the distance from town that it is," said a farmer to a prominent business man after he had hauled a load of corn over muddy roads for eight miles. "Well, we can take your farm and move it four miles closer to town," replied the business man. The farmer looked incredulous. "How?" he asked. "By building good roads," replied the merchant.

URAL ROUTES AND ROADS.

Postal Department Has Become Strong Agency of Highway Improvement.

The marvelous development of the rural mail service shows how greatly the people prize this daily blessing and indicates that they would be extremely reluctant to give it up or be deprived of it for any cause. This being so, the postal department has in its power to become a stronger agency for highway improvement.

There are certainly few communities that would give up their mail service rather than improve their roads, and if the department should see fit to put it up to the people where the roads are bad, give them the choice of making better roads or doing without mail, it seems that they would, in common parlance, "get busy." The department has sent out a number of bulletins containing a warning, and these are said to have been partially effective. Part of the last bulletin issued to postmasters contained this:

"You are directed to inform yourself with reference to the condition of roads and bridges on the rural routes out of your office, and if you find that they require improvements you should present the matter in the strongest and most positive way to the patrons and road officials, informing them that improvements must be made as soon as practicable. If, after a reasonable time has elapsed, the improvements have not been made or started, you will report the fact to this office in order that action may be taken looking to the discontinuance of the service."

"The department is not immediately concerned in elaborate road improvements, but in the interest of the best service to the largest number of patrons it must insist upon roads being kept in good repair, the lack of which is usually due to improper drainage and unsuitable grading and surface work, which can be easily and cheaply accomplished by timely work and the regular use of the split log drag or similar device."

"I have a world of confidence in Chamberlain's Cough Remedy for I have used it with perfect success," writes Mrs. M. J. Basford, Poolesville, Md. For sale by all dealers.

Petition For Stock Law.

Wm. Hall & Others, Breckenridge County, Ky., petition for Stock Law.

It appearing to the Court, after having been sufficiently advised, that Wm. Hall and others on petition for a stock law, being in number more than twenty having signed the petition, and being each and all over the age of 21 years, and legal and qualified voters in Magisterial District No. 4, of Breckenridge County, Ky., known as Bewleyville Magisterial District, and said petition having been presented to the county court of said county at its regular term in August, 1911, praying and asking for a vote to take the sense of the legal and qualified voters in said Magisterial District No. 4, of said county of Breckenridge, known as Bewleyville Magisterial District, upon the question of whether or not cattle generally shall run at large in said Magisterial District; it being the desire of the petitioners herein to prohibit the running at large of all cattle generally and not only certain species thereof.

The said petition having been presented in open court at said August term 1911, the same is now ordered filed of record, and the said petition having been duly filed more than 60 days prior to the next regular November election to be held in November 1911, at which County and State officers may be voted for; and the petitioners having deposited with the County Court the sum of $37.00 dollars the amount required of them by the court to hold said election for the expense of same in said district upon said question.

It is now ordered by the court that said election be held on the next regular election day in November, 1911, in Magisterial District No. 4, of Breckenridge County, Ky., known as Bewleyville Magisterial District of said county and a poll or polls be opened and ballots printed for each poll, if there be more than one, for the purpose of taking the sense of the legal voters in said district upon said question of whether or not cattle generally shall run at large in said district; that said election and notice thereof and a copy of this order be published in the Breckenridge News, a newspaper published in Breckenridge County Ky., giving notice of said election, and that same be published in 5 separate issues of said paper and for more than 20 days prior to said election.

The County Court Clerk is hereby ordered and directed to have the ballots for the various precincts in said Magisterial District No. 4, of Breckenridge County properly prepared and the question printed upon the said ballots as follows, to-wit: "Are you in favor of making it unlawful for cattle to run at large on the public highways and uninclosed lands of the Bewleyville Magisterial District, No. 4?"

And the officers of the regular November election 1911, are hereby directed to open a poll at each and all voting precincts if there be more than one in said District for said purpose as aforesaid herein.

Once to every man and nation

For the good or evil side.
Then it is the brave man chooses,
While the coward stands aside,
Doubting in his abject spirit
Till his Lord is crucified.

Playing politics is a crime when done by Democrats says the chief of all Republicans, Mr. Taft. How is it with Judge O'Rear here in Kentucky? Isn't he playing politics holding one office and playing for another? If the Judge were a Democrat he would surely be committing a crime in the eyes of a Republican. If Judge O'Rear believes in himself, believes what he is telling the people, he should resign his office as Judge of the Court of Appeals.

John Sauter, inventor of the steam shovel, builder of the first locomotive to take a train across the continent, died at his home in Newton, Mass., Sept. 12 at the age of 95. He founded the Globe Locomotive Works, built sixteen war vessels for the government during the Civil War and furnished machinery for the building of the Suez and French Panama Canals. The steam shovels now at work on the Henderson Route are his inventions.

William Addams, the defeated candidate for the Democratic nomination is enthusiastically for the Democratic ticket. He says that every Democrat in his section of the State will support the ticket and that he has no fear but that McCreary will be elected by a handsome majority.

Cloverport Not Much Behind.

Every night at the Cloverport depot an army of fellows who can not vote for the next three years or more yet, gather there to have their evening fun. Friday night the train from Louisville was forty minutes late. When it pulled in it stayed a trifle longer than usual and the boys got to talking with the passengers who had their heads out the windows. One man asked: "Say boys, what is the size of this town?" "2000," they said back. "Got electric lights," he continued. "No," they answered. Then the stranger said: "Behind time here". "Yes" answered Casper Gregory, "Forty minutes". My! Such a yell of laughter that followed.

Little Miss Emily Reid came in the News office one day just before school opened and we remarked about her teeth being so splendid and white. "I have to wash them every morning, but I hate to. Sometimes I don't unless mother makes me". What she spoke can be understood by every child for surely there are many who often loathe to take time to care for their teeth and must be compelled to do so.

The importance of clean teeth to health is being widely recognized now and many schools and teachers are taking the matter in hands to see that every school child has a tooth brush and uses it, at least, twice a day. In Indiana there is a progressive school that has adopted the tooth brush drill.

Almost any small boy would rather take a whipping than go to the dentist. The other day Henry Babbage said to one of his little friends as he was coming from the dental office: "Well, I have just been in the house of misery."

Last Wednesday night Mrs. Tanner was telling us of a remark she once made about a young boy. "They say he is lazy," she said. The friend to whom she was speaking replied: "Who are they?—never say

"they say", if you cannot give names the fact has no authority". Mrs. Tanner says she will never forget that reprimand. It has made her very careful and cautious in repeating and quoting from others. By the way, the boy turned out to be one of the most energetic fellows she had ever known.

Miss Winnie Isome, of Durant, Okla., called at the News office the day she left for her home. She likes Durant, and has a nice position there in a business office. The place is quite a little city. Besides Short & Haynes' drug store there are four or five others and five or six banks. Vegetation there, is as good as here, only the season is quite earlier. "We have fine chickens in the spring, but in the fall an insect, something like a flea gets on them and kills them," she said. Miss Isome has never visited Oklahoma City as it is off her way coming to Kentucky. She thinks the shortest way home, without the sights, is the best.

Motter At The State Fair.

We did not go to the State Fair, but mother went, consequently, we know much about it—more than we did last year after a visit of two whole days. Mother can see more in a day than most women can in a week. I think it is because she was reared on a farm and a farmers daughter if she has any sense at all, sees more than the general run of girls.

Bright, quick country girls can see more things to laugh about and have more fun than any others. In this respect the girls of the small towns come next. City girls miss a lot of wholesome, everyday joy. A bunch of country girls can go to the State Fair and get barrels of pleasure, while the city girls stay at home, waiting to go to a moving picture show to see some tragedy reproduced and then boast of the fact that they did not even go to the fair. Just the people at the State Fair are a moving picture show themselves. They are alive with life and laughter and excitement! They are out for a jolly time and all who join them have it. Mother said she never was in such a crowd as was there Wednesday.

So many home folks from Meade county as well as Breckenridge to chat with and "talk over things." Dad pulled her away from the hogs and pigs by the hardest, to hear Governor Marshall, of Indiana. She was charmed with his personality and his sincerity. Mother is right good in sizing up the man—and makes no difference whether he is a Democrat or a Republican, a Methodist or a Baptist, a beau or a rasher—she knows whereof she speaks.

She enjoyed the show of horses and cattle. There was the finest little Jersey there, broad enough across her back for a base-ball diamond. Talking about cows, mother said last year aunt Emma Fairleigh went to the fair with some of her friends and they saw a man milking. Aunt Emma remarked she wished she had a dollar for as many times as she had done that. Her friends declared she couldn't. To prove to them she asked the man to let her show the women what she could do. Aunt Emma rolled up her sleeves and a milk maid could not have excelled her. Aunt Emma said: "Yes, I can milk a cow and I am proud of it. I am proud of anything I know how to do."

By the way, mother saw Mr. Walter Moorman, Jr., of Glen Dean, in the Judge's ring and pointed him out as a Breckenridge county man. Mr. C. Vic Robertson was also a Judge of the horses.

And such horses! Pharaoh's could not have matched them. The horses from the Lafayette Stock Farm of Indiana were great and the harness they wore was magnificent. The draft horses of Frank Fehr's—the beer man—were beauties. Mother called them "Frank Brewers' horses."

She never saw as much junk (jewelry.) They were selling diamonds (imitations) for $6, as large as the end of your thumb and the saleslady said you couldn't tell them from $600 stones. And people bought them, but the fool killer was not there. Had he been, he would have certainly been busy, especially where they had that cider mill. There was an old fashioned cider mill, but the man wasn't selling old fashioned cider. If you looked long enough you didn't have to buy any to learn it was not the real stuff. Mother said the man had a barrel of apples at the mill, but not a single one did he ever use. He made a racket with a stick and pan (or something) to make people believe he was grinding apples and making the cider right there. He sure fooled most of the crowd, but fortunately all of the crowd were not fools.

The Floral Hall made her head swim—too much in there for my mother. She became very much interested in the Canadian display. Canada is doing some extensive advertising in the United States. You know they have displays to persuade people to go to Canada to live. What impressed her most there were the vegetables. They grow celery root something like a turnip. It is very delicious for salads.

The display of stoves attracted mother—because Mildred wants a new cook stove. They showed a stove that had the oven up high; you don't have to stoop to put the biscuits in and it has a glass door so you can watch the cake bake. Every woman who cooks deserves such a stove.

Mother came home with an ambition—she always does. Now she wants enough money to pay the expenses of every boy and girl in Breckenridge county to the State Fair next year so that they might see what can be done on the farms here in Kentucky and in our homes. She thought the exhibits were marvelous, everything there from a crocheted counterpane to the brass band revealed to her the glories of our Commonwealth. Next year she better not leave her daughters at home!

It takes strange ideas to make the world go around. We picked up an idea lately set forth by a young lady when a woman said: "I shall be glad when the style changes for shirtwaists to open in the back, they are too hard to fasten". The girl reasoned a minute then replied: "I won't, because often I leave a button unfastened just to give people the pleasure of calling my attention to the fact that my waist is unbuttoned." A person does take a bit of joy in saying to a pretty girl! "I beg your pardon, but the second button on your waist is not fastened."

STATE POLITICS

A Hint To School Teachers

Judge O'Rear says he wants to divorce the schools from politics, but he is careful to put his candidate for Superintendent of Public Instruction in charge of Republican headquarters in Western Kentucky. Is this a hint to present and prospective school teachers to come across?—Telegram.

Carry Thing With A High Hand

The two Republican members of the State Election Board are carrying things with a very high hand. They are refusing to appoint the Democrats that Hon. Chas. McDowell, of Danville, the Democratic member recommends but are appointing Democrats that suit them. When the Democrats get the reins again and begin to give them their own medicine you will hear a howl of "Gobelism" go up all over the state. This high-handed outrage is sure to come home to roost upon the perpetrators.

Hard On O'Rear

Once do a doubtful thing and it will stay with you. When Judge O'Rear declared that Senator Bradley was "the greatest living Kentuckian," he little thought he was saying something that would lose him votes throughout the State. By endorsing Bradley the Republican candidate placed a crown of thorns on his own head. His declaration has been received with guffaws from one end of the State to the other.—Henderson Gleaner.

Clarence Wood's Cap

To offset the defection of our good friend Ex-Mayor Wood, of Richmond, Ky., the one, lone, Madison county Democrat who is opposing his townsman, McCreary, so far as we have heard, we were told, Monday, of one Madison county family of eight stalwart sons, and all of them Republicans, who had announced that they would all support McCreary in November, and the same informant said there were at least sixty Republicans in Richmond, who were out and out for McCreary. So Clarence's caper seems to help instead of hurt McCreary.—Winchester Democrat.

To The Voters Of Breckenridge County.

Cloverport, Ky., Sept., 18, 1911.—After being solicited and urged by a great number of my friends, I have decided to become a candidate to represent Breckenridge County in the lower house of the next General Assembly of Kentucky, subject to the action of the Republican convention which meets in Hardinsburg, Monday September 25.

Feeling that the people are entitled to know exactly where their candidates for representative stand on all public questions, I wish, unreservedly to say that I am in entire accord and sympathy with the vigorous campaign now being waged in Kentucky, by Judge O'Rear for cleaner and better government and that I most heartily approve of the platform on which he is running.

I especially wish to emphasize that I am unconditionally in favor of, and in the event of my nomination and election, pledge myself to vote for and support a uniform county unit local option law, applying to all counties in the state, as advocated in the Republican platform.

Pledging you my best endeavors at all times to faithfully and conscientiously represent the PEOPLE of my county if elected, I am, Very respectfully yours, C. W. Moorman.

Roads Need Attention.

Perhaps nothing has been exploited to a greater extent than the King road drag, and perhaps there is no implement that is more generally neglected.
Whether past experience shows that the road drag is not the useful and valuable implement its champions would have us believe or whether it is simply neglecting the use of a good thing is not apparent, but the result is the same. The roads need attention and they need it more frequently than they get it. If the road drag is not the thing then something else should be used. But use something.

GIBSON & SON

STOLYPIN EXPECTED ATTEMPTS ON HIS LIFE.

Said So When He Accepted the Russian Premiership in 1905.

The Russian premier, P. A. Stolypin, who was recently shot by an assassin, had expected attempts on his life.

"I have no doubt that attempts will be made upon my life," said M. Stolypin when he accepted the premiership in July, 1905, "but I hope that order will be restored and stability established in Russia before they are successful."

On Aug. 25, 1906, a bomb was thrown into his country house on Ap-tekarsky island while he was holding a public reception. The explosion killed thirty-two persons and wounded a much larger number, including the premier's daughter of fifteen and his son of three. The daughter was crippled for life. Stolypin, who was in his office at the moment, came off unhurt, although persons with him there were knocked down and a bottle of ink thrown from his desk by the force of the explosion scattered its contents over him.

This attempt at slaughter marked the climax of a reign of terror in many parts of Russia. Stolypin issued orders to the provincial authorities to spare no efforts to stop the disturbances. Arrests followed everywhere. The prisoners got drumhead court martial. Defense in most cases proved useless. Executions occurred in a few hours after arrests. Official records in seven months showed that 1,080 men and women suffered death by shooting or hanging by this process.
He called off the executions by summary process of his own volition when he felt that the terrorists had been subdued and that he had blocked revolution.

M. Stolypin was born in 1863, was graduated from the University of St.
Petersburg in 1884, served for four years in the ministries of the interior and agriculture and in 1899 was made marshal of the provincial nobility. He was vice governor of Grodno in 1902 and governor of Saratoff in 1903.

CHINA NEARING CRISIS.

Test of Government by Provincials Believed to Be Inevitable.

In the opinion of students of oriental affairs, China is rapidly approaching a great crisis in her history. The uprising in Szechuan province is expected to extend to other neighboring provinces, and especially to the southward, where the Mongolian element has for many years been opposed to the reigning Manchu dynasty. Evidently prepared for trouble, the Chinese government has been quick to dispatch troops into the disaffected district.

It is believed at Washington that the government will be able to suppress the present disturbance, though the unforeseen disastrous flooding of the Yangtze valley is expected to drive thousands of the unfortunate natives, whose means of support have been destroyed, into the ranks of the revolutionists.

But it is believed that this Szechuan uprising is only the precursor of other outbreaks in different parts of the Flow Kingdom, for the fact is that the struggle now going on is really a gigantic test of the relative strength and power of the central government as opposed to the provincial governments. In other words, the situation resembles the great feudal wars of Europe in the middle ages. Japan also had to pass through a similar ordeal before the emperor was able to break the power of his mutinous barons, and it is believed that the Chinese government will now be put to the same test.

While the sympathy of occidental nations must remain with the Chinese central government, there can be no interference in this great internal strife, and the activities of other nations, at least for the present, must be confined to the protection of their own citizens resident in China.

GOLF CLUBS FOR TAFT.

Andrew Carnegie Sends the President
a Set Made in Scotland.

Andrew Carnegie has sent Mr. Taft a set of golf clubs. They are the handiwork of J. Dussie of Dornoch, Scotland, which is Carnegie's native heath. Mr. Carnegie entrusted the clubs for delivery to J. G. Schmidlapp of Cincinnati, an old friend of the president, who has recently been visiting Skibo and Europe. Mr. Schmidlapp presented them to Mr. Taft.

With the clubs came the well wishes of Mr. Carnegie, who says that he favors golf for the president because it will give him health to continue his work for world peace, the other great game besides golf in which the president and Mr. Carnegie are interested.

MAUSOLEUM TO HOLD 2,000.

Fireproof Structure Costing $100,000 to Be Built in Cincinnati.

A mausoleum fireproof in construction and gigantic in proportions is to be erected in Cincinnati. It will hold the bodies of 2,000 persons and will cost over $100,000.

The interior will be of concrete and the exterior of stone, with granite trimmings. The crypts will be large enough to hold the biggest coffin yet made, and in case of a family desiring to bury a member in this manner an opening will be chosen. The cof-fined body will be slid into the opening, and as soon as the mourners leave workmen with mixed concrete will cover the opening, thereby hermetically sealing the coffin and its contents.

SHORT SERMONS ON GOOD ROADS.

No farming section which has once had good roads would ever go back to bad roads.

High freight rates are not nearly as heavy a tax on the shippers of stock and other farm produce as bad roads are.

Only a very rich county could afford the tremendous financial drain of bad roads.

A good road is to a country district what a paved street is to the city property that adjoins it. It makes business for that neighborhood.

A farmer living on a good road is a free man. He is not dependent on weather conditions.
He is able to sell his stock and grain and fruit at the best market prices. The railroads have to serve the man who can get his stuff to a shipping point any day in the year.

Money spent for good roads is as good an investment for improving the farm as is money put into stock sheds, grain cribs, fences, seeds or anything else that makes the farm pay.

CHAPTER XXII.

"WHERE IS MY BROTHER?"

WHAT is the explanation of Carmel's reappearance in town and of this sensational introduction of her into the courtroom in a restored state of health of which no one, so far as known, had had any intimation save the man who was responsible for her appearance? The particulars are due you.

She had passed some weeks at Lakewood under the eye of Miss Unwin, the nurse who was detailed to watch as well as tend her. During these weeks she gave no sign of improvement mentally, though she constantly gained strength otherwise and impressed everybody with the clear light in her eye and the absence of everything suggestive of gloom in her expression and language. There was the same complete loss of memory up to the time of the tragic occurrence which had desolated her home; the same harping at odd moments on Adelaide's happiness and her own prospect of seeing this dear sister very soon which had marked the opening days of her convalescence. But beyond and back of all this was some secret joy, unintelligible to the nurse, which helped rather than retarded the sick girl's recovery.

Meanwhile Carmel was allowed such liberty as her condition required, but was never left alone for a moment after a certain day when her eye suddenly took on a strange look of confused inquiry totally dissociated with anything she saw or heard.

The awakening took place at Lakewood. Carmel had been out and was just crossing the hall of her hotel to the elevator when she stopped with a violent start and, clutching the air, was caught by her nurse, who had hurried up at the first intimation of anything unusual in the condition of her patient.

The cause of this agitation was immediately apparent. Near them sat two ladies, each with a small wineglass in her hand—a common sight enough, but it worked a revolution in Carmel's darkened mind. The light of youthful joyousness fled from her face, and the cheek, just pulsing softly with new life, blanched to the deathlike hue of mortal suffering. Dropping her eyes from the women, she said to the woman in whose arms she felt herself supported:

"Explain! Where am I?"
"At Lakewood, in a hotel. You have been ill and are only just recovering."
Her hand went up to her cheek, the one that had been burned, and still showed the deep traces of that accident.

"I remember," said she. Then, with another glance at her dress, which had studiously been kept cheerful, she remarked, with deep reproach: "My sister is dead. Why am I not in black?"
The nurse, realizing her responsibility (she said afterward that it was the most serious moment of her life), subdued her own astonishment at this proof of her young patient's knowledge of a crime of which she was universally supposed to be entirely ignorant and, bestowing an assuring smile on the agitated girl, observed softly:

"You were too ill to be burdened with black. You are better now and may assume it if you will. I will help you buy your mourning."

"Yes; you look like a kind woman. What is your name, please, and are we here alone in this great hotel?"

Now, as a matter of expediency, to save Carmel from the unendurable curiosity of the crowd and herself from the importunities of the New York reporters, Miss Unwin had registered herself and her charge under assumed names. She was, therefore, forced to reply:

"My name is Huckins, and we are here alone. But that need not worry you. I have watched over you night and day for many weeks."

"You have? Because of this slight burn?" Again Carmel's hand went to her cheek.

"Not on account of that only. You have had a serious illness quite apart from that injury. But you are better; you are almost well—well enough to go home, if you will."

"I cannot go home—not just yet. I'm—I'm not strong enough. But we shouldn't be here alone without some man to look after us. Miss Huckins, where is my brother?"

At this question, uttered with emphasis, with anxiety—with indignation—even—Miss Unwin felt the emotion she had so successfully subdued up to this moment betray itself in her voice as she answered with a quiet motion toward the elevator: "Let us go up to our room. There I will answer all your questions."

But Carmel, with the waywardness of her years, or perhaps with deeper reasoning powers than the other would be apt to attribute to her, broke softly away from Miss Unwin's detaining hand, and, walking directly into the office, looked about for the newspaper stand. She reached it just as a boy bulletin, on which had been written these words:

The last juror obtained in the trial of Arthur Cumberland for the murder of his sister, Adelaide.

Carmel saw and stood, a breathless image of horror. A couple of gentlemen came running, but the nurse waved them back and herself caught Carmel and upheld her, in momentary dread of another mental if not physical collapse.

But Carmel had come back into the world of consciousness to stay. Accepting her nurse's support, but giving no sign of waning faculties or imperfect understanding of what she had seen, she spoke quite clearly and with her eyes fixed upon Miss Unwin.

"So that is why I am here, away from all my friends. Was I too ill to be told? Couldn't you make me know what was happening—you or the doctors or—anybody?"

"You were much too ill," protested the nurse, leading her toward the elevator and so by degrees to her room.

"And Arthur—poor Arthur, has been the sufferer! Tell me the whole story. I can bear it," she pleaded. "I can bear anything but not knowing. Why should he have fallen under suspicion? He was not even there. I must go to him. Pack up our clothing, Miss Huckins. I must go to him at once."

With the sudden rending of the clouds which had obscured her intellect strange powers had awakened in this young girl.

"You shall go," began the nurse, and stopped.

Carmel was not listening. Another change of thought had come. "How can I?" fell in unconscious betrayal from her lips. "How can I?" Then she stood silent, ghastly with lack of color one minute and rosy red with its excess the next, until it was hard to tell in which extreme her feeling spoke most truly.

What was the feeling? Nurse Unwin felt it imperative to know. She approached Carmel with renewed offers of help and such expressions of sympathy as she thought might lure her into open speech.

But discretion had come with fear, and Carmel, while not disdaining the other's kindness, instantly made it apparent that, whatever her burden and however unsuited it was to her present weak condition, it was not one she felt willing to share.

"I must think," she murmured as she finally followed the nurse's lead and seated herself on a lounge. "Arthur on trial for his life! Arthur on trial for his life! And Adelaide was not even murdered!"

"No?" gasped the nurse, intent on every word this long silenced witness let fall.

"Had he no friend? Was there not some one to understand? Adelaide"—here her head fell till her face was lost to sight—"had—a—lover?"

"Yes, Mr. Elwood Ranelagh. He was the first to be arrested for the crime."

The soul in Carmel seemed to vanish at this word. The eyes, which had been so farseeing the moment before, grew blank and the lithe young body stiff with that death in life which is almost worse to look upon than death itself. Then the stony eyes softened and fell, the rigidity of her frame relaxed, and Carmel sank back again on the sofa and tried to read the headlines on the open sheet before her. But her eyes were unequal to the task. With a sob she dropped the paper and entreated the nurse to relate to her from her own knowledge all that had passed.

Miss Unwin complied, but with reservations. She said nothing about the marks on Adelaide's throat or of the special reason which the police had for arresting Mr. Ranelagh. She did not dare. Strangulation was a horrible death to contemplate, and if this factor in the crime—she was not deceived by Carmel's exclamation that there had been no murder—was unknown as yet to her patient, as it must be from what she had said, and the absolute impossibility, as she thought, of her having known what went on in the Whispering Pines, then it had better remain unknown to her until circumstances forced it on her knowledge or she had got sufficient strength to bear it.

Carmel received the account well. When she had it fully in mind she looked up into the nurse's face again and repeated, quite calmly, but with immovable decision, the order of an hour before:

"We must return at once. You will pack up immediately."

Miss Unwin nodded and began to open the trunks.

This, however, was a ruse. She did not intend to take her patient back that night. She was afraid to risk it. The next day would be soon enough. But she would calm her by making ready and when the proper moment came would find some complication of trains which would interfere with their immediate departure.

Meanwhile she would communicate at the earliest moment with Mr. Fox. She had been in the habit of sending him frequent telegrams as to her patient's condition. They had been invariably so far—"No difference, mind still a blank," or some code word significant of the same. But a new word was necessary now. She must look it up and formulate her telegram before she did anything else.

The code book was in her top tray. She hunted and hunted for it without being able to lay her hands on it. She grew very nervous. She was only human; she was in a very trying position, and she realized it. Where could that book be? Suddenly she espied it and, falling on her knees before the trunk, with her back still to Carmel, studied out the words she wanted. She was leaning over the tray to write these words in her notebook when—no one ever knew how it happened—the lid of the heavy trunk fell forward and its iron edge struck her on the nape of the neck with a keen blow which laid her senseless. When Carmel reached her side she found herself the strong one and her stalwart nurse the patient.

When help had been summoned, the accident explained and everything done for the unconscious woman which medical skill could suggest, Carmel, finding a moment to herself, stole to the trunk and, lifting up the lid, looked in. She had been watchful of her nurse from the first and was suspicious of the actions which had led to this untoward accident. Seeing the two little books, she took them out. The notebook lay open, and on the page thus disclosed she beheld written:

Ap Lox Fideistum Trubum

Ridiculous nonsense—until she consulted the code. Then these detached and meaningless words took on a significance which she could not afford to ignore.

Ap—A change.

Fideistum—Makes remarkable statements.

Trubum—Shall we return?

Trubum—Not tractable.

Carmel endeavored to find out for whom this telegram was intended. There was nothing to inform her. A moment of indecision was followed by quick action. She had noticed that she had been invariably addressed as Miss Campbell by every one who had come into the room.

Regaining her own room, which was on the other side of their common sitting room, she collected a few necessary articles and placed them in a bag, which she thrust under her bed. Hunting for money, she found quite an adequate amount in her own purse, which was attached to her person. Satisfied thus far, she chose her most inconspicuous hat and coat and, putting them on, went out by her own door into the corridor.

The time—it was the dinner hour—favored her attempt. She found her way to the office unobserved and, going frankly up to the clerk, informed him that she had some telegrams to send and that she would be out for some little time. Would he see that Miss Huckins was not neglected in her absence?

"I will see to it," said he. Then, as she turned to go, he ventured to add: "It is quite dark now. If you would like one of the boys to go with you"—but he received no encouragement and allowed his suggestion to remain unfinished.

She looked grateful for this and was pulling down her veil when she perceived two or three men on the other side of the room watching her in evident wonder. Stepping back to the desk, she addressed the clerk again, this time with a marked distinctness:

"I have been very ill, I know, and not always quite myself. But the shock of this accident to my nurse has cleared my brain and made me sane."

Women as Well as Men are Made Miserable by Kidney and Bladder Trouble.

Kidney trouble preys upon the mind, discourages and lessens ambition; beauty, vigor and cheerfulness soon disappear when the kidneys are out of order or diseased.

Kidney trouble has become so prevalent that it is not uncommon for a child to be born afflicted with weak kidneys. If the child urinates too often, if the urine scalds the flesh, or if, when the child reaches an age when it should be able to control the passage, it is yet afflicted with bed-wetting, depend upon it, the cause of the difficulty is kidney trouble, and the first step should be towards the treatment of these important organs. This unpleasant trouble is due to a diseased condition of the kidneys and bladder and not to a habit as most people suppose.

Women as well as men are made miserable with kidney and bladder trouble, and both need the same great remedy. The mild and the immediate effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It is sold by druggists, in fifty-cent and one-dollar size bottles. You may have a sample bottle by mail free, also a pamphlet telling all about Swamp-Root. Home of Swamp-Root, including many of the thousands of testimonial letters received from sufferers who found Swamp-Root to be just the remedy needed. In writing Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., be sure and mention this paper. Don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghamton, N. Y., on every bottle.

ble again of attending to my own affairs. You can trust me; I can do my errands all right, but perhaps I had better have one of the boys go with me."

The clerk, greatly relieved, rang his bell. With the first step into the street Carmel's freshly freed mind began its work. "Where is the railroad station?" she inquired of the boy who was trotting along at her side.

"Over there," he answered vaguely. "Take me to it."

The sight of the station, from which a train was just leaving, frightened her for a moment with its bustle and many lights, but she rallied under the stress of her purpose and, entering, found the telegraph office, from which she sent this message, directed to her physician at home, Dr. Carpenter:

Look for me on early train. All is clear to me now, and I must return. Preserve silence till we meet.

This she signed with a pet name known only to themselves and dating back to her childish days.

Then she bought a ticket and studied the time table. When quite satisfied she returned to the hotel. She was met in the doorway by the physician who was attending the nurse. He paused when he saw her and asked a few questions, which she was penetrating enough to perceive were more for the purpose of testing her own condition than to express interest in his patient. She answered quietly and was met by a surprise and curiosity which evinced that he was greatly drawn toward her case. This alarmed her. She did not wish to be the object of any one's notice. On the contrary, she desired to obliterate herself, to be counted out so far as all these people were concerned. But, above all, she was anxious not to rouse suspicion. So she stopped and talked as naturally as she could about Miss Huckins' accident and what the prospects were for the night. These were favorable, or so the doctor declared, but the injured woman's condition called for great care, and he would send over a capable nurse at once. Meanwhile the maid who was with her would do very well. She herself need have no worry.

"You are very good," said Carmel. "I am tired and when I once get to bed shall certainly sleep. I shall give orders not to be disturbed. Isn't that right?"

"Shall I accompany you to the door of your room?" he asked.

She shook her head, with a smile.

"I am quite capable of finding my room. I hope Miss Huckins will be as well in a week from now as I am at this moment. But, doctor"—she had been struck by a strange possibility—"I should like to settle one little matter before we part. The money I have may not be quite safe in my hands. My memory might leave me again, and then Miss Huckins might suffer. If you will take charge of some of it on her account I shall feel relieved."

"It would be a wise precaution," he admitted. "But you could just as well leave it at the desk."

"So I can," she smiled. Then, as his eye remained fixed on her: "You are wondering if I have friends. We both have, and I have just come from telegraphing to one of them. You can leave us with an easy mind. All that I dread is that Miss Huckins will worry about me if her consciousness should return during the night."

"It will not return so soon. Next week we may look for it. Then you can be by to reassure her if she asks for you."

The doctor, lifting his hat, took his departure. The interview might have lasted five minutes. She felt as though it had lasted an hour.

She followed the doctor's advice and left half the money she had in charge of the clerk. Then she went upstairs. She was not seen to come down again, but when the 8:45 train started out of the station that night it had for a passenger a young, heavily veiled girl, who went straight to her section. A balcony running by her window had favored her escape.

She was missed the next morning, and an account of her erratic flight reached the papers and was published far and wide. But the name of Miss Caroline Campbell conveyed nothing to the public.

At the house of Dr. Carpenter she met Mr. Moffat. What she told him heartened him greatly for the struggle he saw before him. Indeed, it altered the whole tone of the defense. Perceiving from her story and from what the doctor could tell him of their meeting at the station that her return to town was as yet a secret to every one but themselves, he begged that the secret should continue to be kept.

Carmel wished her brother informed of her return, but the wily lawyer persuaded her to excuse him from taking Arthur into his confidence until the last moment. He knew that he would receive only opposition from his young and stubborn client. One of the stipulations which he had made in securing Mr. Moffat for his counsel was that Carmel's name was to be kept as much as possible out of the proceedings, and to this Mr. Moffat had subscribed, notwithstanding his conviction that the crime laid to the defendant's charge was a result of Ranelagh's passion for Carmel and consequently distinctly the work of Ranelagh's own hand.

He had thought that he could win his case by the powers of oratory and a somewhat free use of innuendo, but his view changed under the fresh enlightenment which he received in his conversation with Carmel. He saw unfolding before him a defense of unparalleled interest. True, it involved this interesting witness in a way that would be unpleasant to the brother, but he was not the man to sacrifice a client to any sentimental scruple—certainly not this client, whose worth he was just beginning to realize.

Carmel was not strong enough for much talk. Dr. Carpenter would not allow it, and the continued clearness of her mind was too invaluable to his case for this farseeing advocate to take any risk. She had told him enough to assure him that circumstances and not guilt had put Arthur where he was and had added to the assurance details of an unexpected nature—so unexpected, indeed, that the lawyer was led away by the prospect they offered of confounding the prosecution by a line of defense to which no clew had been given by anything that had appeared.

He planned then and there a dramatic climax which should take the breath away from his opponent and change the whole feeling of the court toward the prisoner. Strangely enough, the subject of Adelaide's death was discussed in her hearing without any mention being made of strangulation as its immediate cause. Would her action have been different had she known that this was a conceded fact?

CHAPTER XXIII.

"I REMEMBERED THE ROOM."

AS Carmel's gaze passed from her brother's face it traveled slowly and with glowing hesitation over the countenances of those near her, on and on past the judge, past the jury until they reached the spot where I sat. There they seemed to falter, and the beating of my heart became so loud that I instinctively shrank away from my neighbor. By so doing I drew her eye, which fell full upon mine for one overwhelming minute; then she shrank and looked away, but not before the color had risen in a flood to her cheek.

The hope which had sprung to life under her first beautiful aspect vanished at sight of this flush, for it was not one of joy or surprise or even of unconscious sympathy. It was the banner of a deep, unendurable shame. But in a few minutes her features settled into a strange placidity, undisturbed by the leveled gaze of a hundred eyes. Her whole attention was concentrated on her brother and wavered only when the duties of the occasion demanded a recognition of the various gentlemen concerned in the trial.

Mr. Moffat prefaced his examination by the following words:

"May it please your honor, I wish to ask the indulgence of the court in my examination of this witness. She is just recovering from a long and dangerous illness, and, while I shall endeavor to keep within the rules of examination, I shall be grateful for any consideration which may be shown her by your honor and by the counsel on the other side."

Mr. Fox at once rose. He had by this time recovered from his astonishment at seeing before him and in a fair state of health the young girl whom he had every reason to believe to be still in a condition of partial forgetfulness at Lakewood and under the care of a woman entirely in his confidence and under his express orders. He had also mastered his chagrin at the triumph which her presence here and under these dramatic circumstances had given his adversary. He expressed in warm tones his deep desire to extend every possible indulgence.

Mr. Moffat bowed his acknowledgments and waited for his witness to take the oath, which she did with a simple grace which touched all hearts, even that of her constrained and unconquered brother. Compelled by the silence and my own bounding pulses to look at her in my own despite, I caught the sweet and elevated look with which she laid her hand on the book and asked myself if her presence here was not a self accusation which would bring satisfaction to nobody, which would sink her and hers into an ignominy worse than the conviction of the brother whom she was supposedly there to save.

Tortured by this fear, I awaited events in indescribable agitation.

The cool voice of Mr. Moffat broke in upon my gloom. Carmel had resumed herself after taking the oath, and the customary question could be heard:

"Your name, if you please."

"Carmel Cumberland."

"Do you recognize the prisoner, Miss Cumberland?"

"Yes; he is my brother."

A thrill ran through the room. The lingering tone, the tender accent, told some of the feeling she thus expressed seemed to pass into every heart which contemplated the two. From this moment ment on he was looked upon with less harshness. People showed a disposition to discern innocence where perhaps they had secretly desired until now to discover guilt.

"Miss Cumberland, will you be good enough to tell us where you were at or near the hour of 10 on the evening of your sister's death?"

"I was in the clubhouse—in the house you call the Whispering Pines."

At this astounding reply, unexpected by every one present save myself and the unhappy prisoner, incredulity, seasoned with amazement, marked every countenance. Carmel Cumberland in the clubhouse that night—she who had been found at a late hour in her own home, injured and unconscious! It was not to be believed, or it would not have been if Arthur, with less self control than he had hitherto maintained, had not shown by his morose air and the silent drooping of his head that he accepted this statement, wild and improbable as it seemed. Mr. Fox started to rise at her words; but, noting the prisoner's attitude, he hastily re-seated himself, realizing, perhaps, that evidence of which he had never dreamed lay at the bottom of the client's manner and the counsel's complacency.

Mr. Moffat, who saw everything, smiled slightly as he spoke encouragingly to his witness and propounded his next question:

"Miss Cumberland, was your sister with you when you went to the clubhouse?"

"No; we went separately."

"How? Will you explain?"

"I drove there. I don't know how Adelaide went."

"You drove there?"

"Yes. I had Arthur harness up his horse for me, and I drove there."

A moment of silence, then a slow awakening on the part of judge, jury and prosecution to the fact that the case was taking a turn for which they were ill prepared. To Mr. Moffat it was a moment of intense self congratulation, and something of the gratification he felt crept into his voice as he said:

"Miss Cumberland, will you describe this horse?"

"It was a gray horse. It has a large black spot on its left shoulder."

"To what vehicle was it attached?"

"To a cutter—my brother's cutter."

"Was that brother with you? Did he accompany you in your ride to the Whispering Pines?"

"No. I went quite alone."

Entrancement had now seized upon every mind. Even if her testimony were not true, but merely the wanderings of a mind not fully restored, the interest of it was intense.

"And how did you return? With whom and by what means did you regain your own house?"

The answer came with simple directness:

"In the same way I went. I drove back in my brother's cutter, and, being all alone, just as before, I put the horse away myself and went into my empty home and up to Adelaide's room, where I lost consciousness."

"Miss Cumberland, do you often ride out alone on nights like that?"

"I never did before. I would not have dared to do it then if I had not taken a certain precaution."

"And what was this precaution?"

Women!

If weak, you need Cardui, the woman's tonic. Cardui is made from gentle herbs, acts in a natural manner, and has no bad results, as some of the strong drugs sometimes used. As a medicine—a tonic—for weak, tired, worn-out women, Cardui has been a popular success for over 50 years.

E 57
Take CARDUI

The Woman's Tonic

Mrs. Lula Walden, of Gramlin, S. C., followed this advice. Read her letter: "I was so weak, when I first began to take Cardui, that it tired me to walk just a little. Now, I can do all the general housework, for a family of 9." Try Cardui for your troubles. It may be the very remedy you need.

"I wore an old coat of my brother's over my dress and one of his hats on my head."

It was out—the fact for the suppression of which I had suffered arrest without a word, because of which Arthur had gone even further and submitted to trial with the same constancy. Instinctively his eyes and mine met, and at that moment there was established between us an understanding that was in strong contrast to the surrounding turmoil, which now exceeded all limits, as the highly wrought up spectators realized that these statements, if corroborated, destroyed one of the strongest points which had been made by the prosecution. This caused a stay in the proceedings until order was partially restored, and the judge's voice could be heard in a warning that the courtroom would be cleared of all spectators if this break of decorum was repeated.

"Miss Cumberland, will you now give the jury the full particulars of that evening's occurrences as witnessed by yourself? Begin your relation, if you please, with an account of the last meal you had together," said Mr. Moffat when the trial was resumed.

Carmel hesitated. Her youth—her conscience, perhaps—shrank in manifest distress from this inquisition.

"Ask me a question," she prayed. "I do not know how to begin."

"Very well. Who were seated at the dinner table that night?"

"My sister, my brother, Mr. Ranelagh and myself."

"Did anything uncommon happen during the meal?"

"Yes; my sister ordered wine and had our glasses all filled. She never drank wine herself, but she had glass filled also. Then she dismissed Helen, the waitress, and when the girl was gone she rose and held up her glass and invited us to do the same. 'We will drink to my coming marriage,' said she, but when we had done this she turned upon Arthur, with bitter words about his habits, and, declaring that another bottle of wine should never be opened again in the house, unclosed her fingers and let her glass drop on the table, where it broke. Arthur then let his fall and I mine. We all three let our glasses fall and break."

"And Mr. Ranelagh?"

"He did not let his fall. He set it down on the cloth. He had not drunk from it."

Clear, perfectly clear, tallying with what we had heard from other sources.

"Miss Cumberland, where were you looking when you let your glass fall?"

My heart gave a bound. I remembered that moment well. So did she, as could be seen from the tremulous flush and the determination with which she forced herself to speak.

"At Mr. Ranelagh," she answered finally.

"Not at your brother?"

"No."

"And at whom was Mr. Ranelagh looking?"

"At—at me."

"Not at your sister?"

"No."

"Was anything said?"

"Not then. With the dropping of the glasses we all drew back from the table and walked toward a little room where we sometimes sat before going into the library. Arthur went first, and Mr. Ranelagh and I followed, Adelaide coming last. We went this way into the little room and—what other question do you wish to ask?" she finished, with a burning blush.

Mr. Moffat was equal to the appeal.

"Did anything happen? Did Mr. Ranelagh speak to you or you to him, or did your sister Adelaide speak?"

"No one spoke, but Mr. Ranelagh put a little slip of paper into my hand—a note. As he did this my brother looked round. I don't know whether he saw the note or not, but his eye caught mine, and I may have blushed. Next moment he was looking past me, and presently he flung himself out of the room and I heard him going upstairs. Adelaide had joined me by this time, and Mr. Ranelagh turned to speak to her, and—

and I went over to the bookshelves to read my note."

"And did you read it then?"

"No; I was afraid. I waited till Mr. Ranelagh was gone, then I went up to my room and read it. It was not a—a note to be glad of—I mean, proud of. I'm afraid I was a little glad of it at first. I was a wicked girl."

"Miss Cumberland, before you tell us about this note will you be good enough to inform us whether any words passed between you and your sister before you went upstairs?"

"Oh, yes; we talked. We all three talked, but it was about indifferent matters. The servants were going to a ball, and we spoke of that. Mr. Ranelagh did not stay long. Very soon he remarked that he had a busy evening before him and took his leave. I was not in the room with them when he did this. I was in the adjoining one, but I heard his remark and saw him go. I did not wait to talk to Adelaide."

"Now, about the note?"

"I read it as soon as I reached my room. Then I sat still for a long time."

"Miss Cumberland, pardon my request, but will you tell us what was in that note?"

She lifted her patient eyes and looked straight at her brother. He did not meet her gaze, but the dull flush which lit up the dead white of his cheek showed how he suffered under this ideal. At me she never glanced.

"I do not remember the words," she said finally as her eyes fell again to her lap. "But I remember its meaning. It was an invitation for me to leave town with him that very evening and be married at some place he mentioned. He said it would be the best way to—end—matters."

CHAPTER XXIV.

"I LOVED ADELAIDE BETTER THAN MYSELF."

THIS brought Mr. Fox to his feet.

Turning to the judge, he cried: "This testimony is irrelevant and incompetent, and I ask to have it stricken out."

Mr. Moffat's voice as he arose to answer this was like honey poured upon gall.

"It is neither irrelevant nor incompetent, and if it were the objection comes too late. My friend should have objected to the question."

"The whole course of counsel has been very unusual," began Mr. Fox.

"Yes, but so is the case. I beg your honor to believe that in some of its features this case is not only unusual, but almost without a precedent. I beg that my witness may be allowed to proceed and tell her story in all its details."

"The motion is denied," declared the judge.

Mr. Fox sat down, to the universal relief of all but the two persons most interested—Arthur and myself.

Mr. Moffat, generous enough or discreet enough to take no note of his opponent's discomfiture, lifted a paper from the table and held it toward the witness.

"Do you recognize these lines?" he asked, placing the remnants of my half burned communication in her hands.

She started at sight of them. Evidently she had never expected to see them again.

"Yes," she answered after a moment. "This is a portion of the note I have mentioned."

"You recognize it as such?"

"I do."

Her eyes lingered on the scrap and followed it as it was passed back and marked as an exhibit.

Mr. Moffat recalled her to the matter in hand.

"What did you do next, Miss Cumberland?"

"I answered the note."

"May I ask to what effect?"

"I refused Mr. Ranelagh's request. I said that I could not do what he asked and told him to wait till the next day and he would see how I felt toward him and toward Adelaide. That was all. I could not write much. I was suffering greatly."

"Suffering in mind or suffering in body?"

"Suffering in my mind. I was terrified, but that feeling did not last very long. Soon I grew happy, happier than I had been in weeks, happier than I had ever been in all my life before. I found that I loved Adelaide better than I did myself. This made everything easy, even the sending of the answer I have told you about to Mr. Ranelagh."

"Miss Cumberland, how did you get this answer to Mr. Ranelagh?"

"By means of a gentleman who was going away on the very train I had been asked to leave on. He was a guest next door, and I carried the note in to him."

"Did you do this openly?"

"No; I'm afraid not. I slipped out by the side door in as careful a way as I could."

"Did this attempt at secrecy succeed? Were you able to go and come without meeting any one?"

"No. Adelaide was at the head of the stairs when I came back, standing there, very stiff and quiet."

"Did she speak to you?"

"No. She just looked at me. But it wasn't a common look. I shall never forget it."

"And what did you do then?"

"I went to my room."

"Miss Cumberland, did you see any body else when you came in at this time?"

"Yes, our maid, Helen. She was just laying down a bunch of keys on the table in the lower hall. I stopped and looked at the keys. I had recognized them as the ones I had seen in Mr. Ranelagh's hands many times. He had gone, yet there were his keys. One of them unlocked the clubhouse. I noticed it among the others, but I didn't touch it then. Helen was still in the hall, and I ran straight upstairs, where I met my sister, as I have just told you."

"Miss Cumberland, continue the story. What did you do after re-entering your room?"

"I don't know what I did first. I was very excited—elated one minute, deeply wretched and very frightened the next. I must have sat down, for I was shaking very much and felt a little sick. The sight of that key had brought up pictures of the clubhouse, and I thought and thought how quiet it was and how far away and how cold it was, too, and how secret. I would go there for what I had to do there! And then I saw in my fancy one of its rooms, with the moon in it, and—but I soon shut my eyes to that. I heard Arthur moving about his room, and this made me start up and go out into the hall again."

"Arthur's room is near and Adelaide's far off, but I went to Adelaide's first. Her door was shut, and when I went to open it I found it locked. Calling her name, I said that I was tired and would be glad to say good night. She did not answer at once. When she did her voice was strange, though what she said was very simple—I was to please myself; she was going to retire too. And then she tried to say good night, but she only half said it, like one who is smoked with tears or some other dreadful emotion. I cannot tell you how this made me feel, but you don't care for that. You want to know what I did—what Adelaide did. I will tell you, but I cannot hurry."

"Take your time, Miss Cumberland; we have no wish to hurry you."

"I can go on now. The next thing I did was to knock at Arthur's door. I heard him getting ready to go out, and I wanted to speak to him before he went. When he heard me he opened the door and let me in. He began at once on his grievances, but I could not listen to them. I wanted him to harness the gray mare for me and leave it standing in the stable. I explained the request by saying that it was necessary for me to see a certain friend of mine immediately and that no one would notice me in the cutter under the bearskins. He didn't approve, but I persuaded him. I even persuaded him to wait till Zadok was gone, so that Adelaide would know nothing about it. He looked glum, but he promised."

"He was going away when I heard Adelaide's steps in the adjoining room. This frightened me. The partition is very thin between these two rooms, and I was afraid she had heard me ask Arthur for the gray mare and cutter. I could hear her rattling the bottles in the medicine cabinet hanging on this very wall. I hurried back to my own room, where I collected such little articles as I needed for the expedition before me."

"I had hardly done this when I heard the servants on the walk outside, then Arthur going down. The impulse to see and speak to him again was irresistible. I flew after him and caught him in the lower hall. 'Arthur,' I cried, 'look at me—look at me well—and then—kiss me!' And he did kiss me. I'm glad when I think of it, though he did say next minute: 'What is the matter with you? What are you going to do—to meet that villain?'"

"I looked straight into his face. I waited till I saw I had his whole attention. Then I said as slowly and emphatically as I could: 'If you mean Elwood—no! I shall never meet him again, except in Adelaide's presence. He will not want to meet me. You may be at ease about that. Tomorrow all will be well and Adelaide very happy.'"

"He shrugged his shoulders and reached for his coat and hat. As he was putting them on I said, 'Don't forget to harness up Jenny. Jenny is the gray mare. And leave off the bells.' I urged, 'I don't want Adelaide to hear me go out.'"

"He swung about at this. 'You and Adelaide are not very good friends, it seems.' As good as you and she are, I answered. Then I flung my arms about him. 'Don't go down street to-night,' I prayed. 'Stay home for this one night. Stay in the house with Adelaide. Stay till I come home.' He stared, and I saw his color change. Then he flung me off, but not rudely. 'Why don't you stay?' he asked. Then he laughed and added, 'I'll go harness the mare.'"

"The key's in the kitchen," I said. 'I'll go get it for you. I heard Zadok bring it in.' He did not answer, and I went for the key. I found two on the nail, and I brought them both, but I only handed him one, the key to the stable door. 'Which way are you going?' I asked as he looked at the key, then back toward the kitchen. 'The short way, of course.' Then here's the key to the Fulton grounds.'"

"As he took the key I prayed again: 'Don't do what's in your mind, Arthur. Don't drink tonight.' He only laughed, and I said my last word: 'If you do it will be for the last time. You'll never drink again after tomorrow.'"

"He made no answer to this, and I went slowly upstairs. Everything was quiet—quiet as death—in the whole house. If Adelaide had heard us she made no sign. Going to my own room, I waited until I heard Arthur come out of the stable and go away by the door in the rear wall. Then I stole out again. I carried a small bag with me, but no coat or hat."

"Pausing and listening again and again, I crept downstairs and halted at the table under the rack. The keys were still there. Putting them in my bag, I searched the rack for one of my brother's warm coats. But I took none I saw. I remembered an old one which Adelaide had put away in the closet under the stairs. Getting this I put it on, and, finding a hat there, too, I took that also, and when I had pulled it over my forehead and drawn up the collar of the coat I was quite unrecognizable. I was going out when I remembered there would be no light in the clubhouse. I had put a box of matches in my bag while I was upstairs, but I needed a candle. Slipping back, I took a candlestick and candle from the dining room mantel and drove swiftly away."

"How did you leave the stable door?"

"Open."

"Can you tell us what time it was when you started?"

"No. I did not look. Time meant nothing to me. I drove as fast as I could straight down the hill and out toward the Whispering Pines. I had seen Adelaide in her window as I went flying by the house, but not a soul on the road nor a sign of life near or far. The whistle of a train blew as I stopped in the thicket near the clubhouse door. It was the express train you can tell."

"Never mind the if," said Mr. Moffat. "It is enough that you heard the whistle. Go on with what you did."

"I tied up my horse, then I went into the house. I had used Mr. Ranelagh's key to open the door, and for some reason I took it out of the lock when I got in and put the whole bunch back into my satchel. But I did not lock the door. Then I lit my candle and then— I went upstairs."

THROW OUT THE LINE

Give The Kidneys Help And Many People Will Be Happier.

"Throw Out The Life Line"—The kidneys need help. They're overworked—can't get the poison filtered out of the blood.

They're getting worse every minute. Will you help them?

Doan's Kidney Pills have brought thousands of kidney sufferers back from the verge of despair.

Read this case:

Mrs. Lotus Hoover, Eighth St., Cannelton, Ind., says: "I cannot say too much in praise of Doan's Kidney Pills for I have taken them with success and other members of my family have also profited through their use. My kidneys were disordered for a long time before I knew exactly what ailed me. My limbs were stiff and sore and I had sharp pains across the small of my back. I also suffered from headaches and dizzy spells. Seeing Doan's Kidney Pills highly recommended by local people who had taken them, I was finally led to begin their use. The contents of three boxes completely cured me."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States.

GIVES UP PORT ARTHUR.

Japan Moves to Chinhai Bay on Korean Coast For a Gibraltar.

Purely strategical reasons have induced the Japanese government to decide upon the abandonment of a naval station at Port Arthur. In Manchuria, representing an investment of many millions of dollars. This station was built by the Russians when they were in control of the Liaotung peninsula under a nominal lease from China. Even after it was shown to fail of that degree of impregnability which was the expectation of its founders and fell into the hands of the Japanese as an incident of the Russo-Japanese war the victors did not hesitate to spend another great sum of money upon the defenses.

But the acquisition of Korea by Japan has made the Port Arthur station secondary in importance from a naval point of view. It was too far inland to be of any use in the defense of Korea, so the decision has been reached to abandon the place as a naval station and to transfer as much of the material as can be used elsewhere to the new site selected at Chinhai bay, on the coast of Korea, a position that will command the entrance to the Yellow sea and the great gulf of Pechili, as well as afford a measure of protection to the western coast of Japan and the strait of Korea.

Great docks will be constructed at this place, which will be reserved exclusively for naval purposes. The port will be closed to commerce, while Port Arthur will be released for the use of the merchant marine.

MAINE AND PROHIBITION

"Dry" Law Has Prevailed For Sixty Years.

HISTORY OF LEGISLATION.

Brigadier General Dow Was Father of the Movement—Agitation For Repeal Was Started Because of Wholesale Violations of Statute.

Prohibition in Maine is sixty years old. The recent election, in which the "wets" appear to have won, although there will be a contest in the courts, was the first time in twenty-seven years that her citizens were called on to vote on the subject. Brigadier General Neal Dow was the father of the movement. It was he who in 1851 drafted the first severely prohibitory law of the state. He was in the forefront of the fight over all succeeding prohibition laws, which culminated in the constitutional amendment of 1881, repeal of which has just been voted on.

That amendment came up for consideration after Maine had tried state wide statutory prohibition for over a quarter of a century. It was proposed by the Sixty-first legislature and submitted to a test vote on Sept. 8, 1884. It was overwhelmingly approved, 70,783 persons voting for it and only 23,811 against it. Governor Robie issued a proclamation in regard to it on the following Dec. 3, and the amendment actually went into effect in January, 1885. It prohibited the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors, not including cider, but legalized the sale of liquors for medicinal and mechanical purposes and for the arts. The article in full reads:

The manufacture of intoxicating liquors, not including cider, and the sale and keeping for sale of intoxicating liquors are and shall be forever prohibited, except, however, that the sale and keeping for sale of such liquors for medicinal purposes and for the arts and the sale and keeping for sale of cider may be permitted under such regulations as the legislature may provide.

The legislature shall enact laws with suitable penalties for the suppression of the manufacturing, sale and keeping for sale of intoxicating liquors, with the exceptions herein specified.

This clause of the constitution was unquestioned for twenty years. In 1904 Governor Cobb attempted a strict enforcement of the prohibition law. When he ran for re-election his plurality shrank from 27,000 to 7,000. With the swinging of the state this year from the Republican to the Democratic column state leaders figured that perhaps a majority of the voters were not in favor of "no license."

The history of prohibition in Maine is declared to have been marked by wide violations of the law. Secret bars are said to have flourished everywhere. The mail order liquor dealers are said to have smuggled liquor into the state by trainloads, while moonshine distilleries flourished.

Finally the legislature enacted the Sturgis law, authorizing Governor Cobb to appoint a commission to search homes for forbidden beverages. The legislature repealed the Sturgis law in 1906, but Governor Cobb vetoed the repeal. Then arose the movement for a amendment of the constitution.

The campaign just closed was hard fought on both sides and attracted the attention of temperance workers all over the world. Mrs. Lillian M. N. Stevens, national president of the Woman's Christian Temperance union and herself a Portland woman, took charge of the fight for the prohibition element. Campaigners were enlisted from all over the country. The international prohibition association flooded the state with literature containing interviews with prominent men and women gathered all over the world. The National Temperance society, the Anti-saloon league and the Good Templars also were active.

TO KILL FRUIT PESTS.

Electric Shocks Instead of Sprays Used in Washington.

Electricity as an agency to destroy the codling moth and other bug pests is the latest innovation introduced in modern apple orcharding in the Spokane valley, Washington, where was recently made what is declared to have been the first demonstration of its kind in the world. The test was made in a six-year-old orchard, and more than a score of second brood moths and many green aphides were killed in a few minutes.

The apparatus consists of a storage battery to charge the incandescent light globes, each of six candle power, which are netted with fine steel wire, coated with copper and tin, alternately. Attracted by the bright lights in the trees to which the globes are carried at the ends of a covered wire, the moths fly against the netting, complete the electric circuit and are killed.

It is estimated that one battery to an acre of trees will keep the moths under control, thus eliminating the usual spraying and saving many dollars annually for help and equipment.

NO FLEET FOR SAN FRANCISCO

Acting Secretary of Navy Won't Lend It to Aid Celebration.

Acting Secretary of the Navy Winthrop has denied the request of various civic organizations in San Francisco that the proposed cruise of the Pacific fleet to Hawaii be postponed so that the war vessels may take part in a naval parade incident to the breaking of ground for the Panama-Pacific exposition, which will take place on Oct. 14 next upon the occasion of President Taft's visit to San Francisco. The Pacific fleet is scheduled to sail from San Diego on Oct. 1 for Honolulu. In denying the request Mr. Winthrop said the cruise could not be postponed without serious detriment to the fleet's efficiency.
